

Medi-Cal Protects the Health of California's Children

March 2017

More than 5.7 million children, over half of all California children, have coverage through Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), together in California known as Medi-Cal. Medi-Cal has provided affordable, comprehensive, age-appropriate health coverage for low-income children, seniors, children and adults with disabilities, and abused and neglected children in foster care for more than 50 years. Medi-Cal remains a critical children's program – 42 percent of Medi-Cal enrollees are children. As federal policymakers make decisions about our health care system, Medicaid's historically strong protections must be protected from cuts or structural changes that would increase the number of uninsured children, undermine access to crucial health services, and increase costs for families.

Medi-Cal Provides Access to the Health Services Children Need to Children Survive and Thrive

- Medi-Cal's well-child check-ups, screenings and guarantee of treatment ensure healthy development. Health issues caught early are less expensive to treat, with fewer long-term health consequences.
- Medicaid's Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnostic, and Treatment (EPSDT) benefit is the gold standard of coverage for children – it ensures children access to all medically necessary health and mental health services.
- Medi-Cal serves 42 percent of California children with disabilities such as autism. Medi-Cal is often the only viable source of financing for their health needs, which can be extensive. Medi-Cal ensures children have access to the medical therapies and devices such as wheelchairs and hearing aids that allow them to function and learn.
- Compared to low-income uninsured children, children insured by Medi-Cal are significantly more likely to have a regular doctor and receive well-child care, and significantly less likely to have unmet or delayed health needs.

Medi-Cal is a Smart Investment in California's Future

- Thanks in large part to Medi-Cal, the percentage of uninsured children in California has fallen to a historic low, 3 percent.
- Insured children are more likely than uninsured children to be academically successful, graduate from high school, attend college. In the long run, children covered by Medi-Cal grow up to be healthier as adults, earn higher wages, and pay more in taxes.
- The cost of covering children in Medi-Cal is low: while children make up approximately half of Medi-Cal beneficiaries, their care only constitutes 19 percent of costs.
- Covering a child through Medi-Cal costs significantly less than private coverage. Over the last decade, Medi-Cal's per person costs have been growing more slowly than premiums for private employer coverage.
- Medi-Cal is lean and efficient: its administrative costs are about half those of private insurance.

Medi-Cal Must Be Protected from Cuts and Changes that Would Harm Children

- Federal action to cut Medicaid through a block grant or per capita cap, or eliminate federal Medicaid expansion funds by repealing the ACA, would not reduce or eliminate health needs, but rather shift the costs of meeting those needs to states, communities, and families. An uninsured child costs the local community $2,100 per year more than a child insured by Medi-Cal.
- Keeping Medi-Cal strong will help ensure that California's children have access to the health coverage they need to survive, thrive, and drive the economy of tomorrow.
